The Architecture & Design Film Festival (ADFF) returns to Chicago next weekend in its second consecutive year at the Chicago Architecture Center (CAC). The five-day festival features 20 films, ten short films, and a series of panels and speakers pulled from the worlds of architecture and design within Chicago and internationally. The festival runs in Chicago after visiting New York, Toronto, and Vancouver during the last three months.

The film medium brings visibility to far-flung stories, the narratives bridging temporal, geographic, and cultural gaps to share universal components of our structural, ecological, and social fabric. The feature films survey a broad range of themes and voices of those designing, developing, and interacting with the built environment.
